

His or Hen's

A rooster and a hen are standing over an egg inside a chicken coop.

Rooster

That's not mine!

Hen

You're the only rooster in the farm.

The rooster examines the egg.

Rooster

He looks nothing like me.

Hen

He's not hatched yet.

Rooster

We'll make him hatch!

Hen

Don't you know ANYTHING?
You have to sit on the egg to hatch on it. Go on, sit!

Rooster

Are you crazy woman? I'm not gonna sit on an egg all day!

Hen

You roosters are all the same – you think you can run around having fun, while we have to sit in the darkness and hatch your eggs!

Rooster

It's not Mine!

Hen

Yes it is!

Rooster

No way!

Suddenly, the egg starts cracking. They both look at it. A moment of tense anticipation... then in one instant, the egg falls apart completely to reveal a cute little chick who's black as coal. As the white rooster and hen stare at it, the chick happily jumps out of the nest, past them and out of the hut. Hen looks very embarrassed. There's a beat. Then a smile spreads over rooster's face.

Rooster (sniff)

My son!

Long shot as hen and rooster walk outside, hugging each other, looking at the cute black chick playing outside the hut. The camera tilts up to reveal a black crow standing on a branch. He gives a characteristic cry, then flies off.

END.

